Introduction

The Freedom of Information (Scotland) Act 2002 (FOISA) was introduced in January 2005. The Act requires all public authorities in Scotland to make any information they hold available on request.

The subjects reflect the issues of interest to the press and the public, such as rising rates of alcohol and drug abuse in children and young people, teenage pregnancies and the cost of rising rates of obesity to the NHS. Some of the areas of interest which arose during this year include staff earning in excess of £100,000, data losses, complaints and compensation claims and maternity services. A full list of all the requests made to NHS Borders can be found on the Information Governance intranet site and on the NHS Borders website.

The FOI(S)A protocol is reviewed annually to ensure issues are addressed and to take account of developments in the FOI(S) system.

1 Activity

The volume of FOI requests continues to rise with 2009/10 seeing an increase of 23% on the previous year. Most significantly, the rate of requests from the Scottish Parliament rose by 128% from 28 requests in 2008/09 to 64 in 2009/10. Requests from the media continue to account for the highest volume of work at 45% and most other categories have remained stable.

2 Response Times

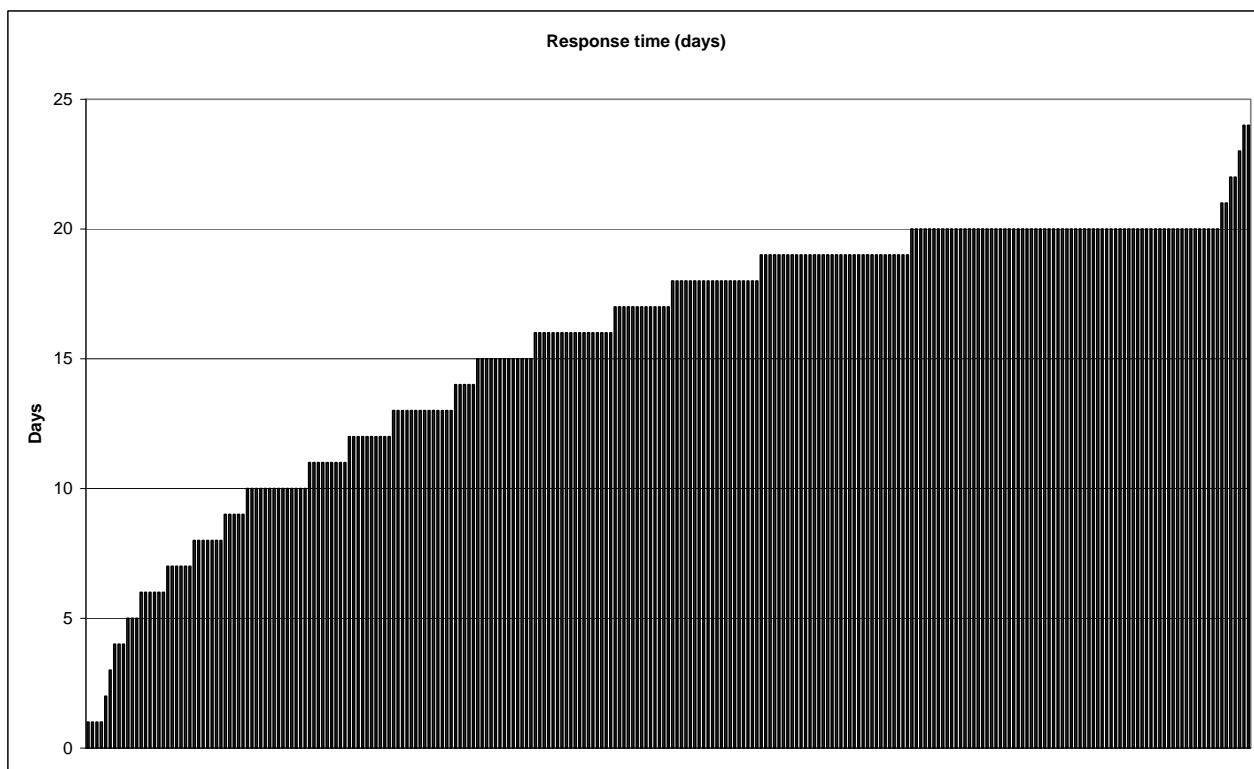

The Act requires that all requests are responded to within 20 working days. During the year 2009/10, seven applicants did not receive a response within this timescale. In each case the applicant was informed of and accepted the likely delay in advance. No action was taken by the applicant in any of these cases.

4 Performance monitoring

Quarterly activity reports are produced for the Information Governance Committee. These reports detail the requests made, our response times for answering the requests and where exemptions are applied, among other performance indicators. These reports are published on the staff intranet and the combined report for the year is published on the NHS Borders website.

5 Reviews & Appeals

Applicants who are unhappy with the response they receive or the way in which the response was handled may ask for a review of their request. If they remain dissatisfied, they may appeal to the Office of the Scottish Information Commissioner.

In 2009/10 there was one request for an internal review. The request (ref no. 201-09) had asked for information regarding staff earning more than £100,000 per annum. In our response we supplied information from the validated accounts for 2008/09. The applicant requested more recent information. The Internal Review Panel upheld the original decision as providing more up to date information would require a significant degree of estimation and supposition rendering the information inaccurate.

There are no appeals currently with the Office of the Scottish Information Commissioner.
